(From the Atlantic Monthly.)
The Mantle of St. John de Matha.
A Legend of "The Red, White, and Blue."
1861-1862.

By JOHN W. WHITTIER.
A strong and mighty Angel,
Calm, terrible, and bright,
The cross in blood and blue,
Upon his mantle white.

Two captives by him kneeling,
Each on his broken chain,
Saw him to God who raised
The dead to life again.

Dropping his cross-wrought mantle,
He said: "Thou art the Angel said
"Take thou, O Freedom's priest, this sign—
The white, the blue, and red."

Then rose up John de Matha,
In his mantle of the Lord's grace,
And walked through all the land of France
The ransom of the slave.

The gates of tower and castle
He opened with his hand,
The door to the Languedoc fell,
The cross was in the land.

For all men owned his errand,
And paid his righteous tax,
And the land of France was free,
In his mantle of the Lord's grace.

At last, on-bound from Tunis,
His care for all was free,
Faded with sorrow, Christian soul,
In his mantle of the Lord's grace.

But, torn by pain and hunger,
He fell in the land of France,
And on the wild waves, rudderless,
A shattered hull was wrecked.

"God save us!" cried the captain,
"For we are in the land of France,
We have the ship and crew,
And the land of France is free."
